

When working with or on behalf of justice involved women, consider the following:

Assess the Effectiveness of Your Existing Approaches

- Utilize the Gender-Responsive Policy & Practice Assessment (GRPPA) at www.nicic.gov/grppa/ to assess your organization's current strengths and gaps in gender responsiveness.
- Provide staff with training and educational opportunities focused on working with justice involved women.
- Learn from other facilities and systems about what has been successful and unsuccessful when working with justice involved women.

Learn More about Each Woman's Needs and Strengths and Develop a Personalized Plan

- Conduct gender responsive risk and need assessment tools to identify the factors that brought the woman into the justice system and the strengths that can mitigate negative outcomes.
- Engage each woman through a gender responsive case management process (e.g., Gender Responsive Strategies for Women Offenders).
- Develop a case plan that addresses each woman's specific needs and help her to mobilize her personal strengths and social supports.

Find Opportunities to Integrate Gender-Responsive Approaches to Improve Public Safety Outcomes for Women

- Acknowledge that gender matters and understand and apply gender responsive principles.
- Bring together partners (justice system professionals, mental health services, human and social services, advocacy groups, child welfare, and others) to address issues impacting justice involved women at every point in the system.
- Provide access to legal assistance for women who may lose, or are trying to maintain, custody of their children.
- Provide opportunities for trauma, substance abuse and mental health treatment to build resiliency and promote healing.
- Identify community resources that can enhance services provided within the corrections system and help support her and her family in the community.
- Provide parenting classes and family counseling.
- Establish educational and vocational opportunities to increase women's feelings of self-worth and build their economic self-sufficiency.
- Encourage visits from children, make visiting areas child-friendly and consider opportunities for justice involved women to play, read and bond with their children during visits and through interactions via telephone or video conferencing and other similar platforms.
- Be cautious in the use of restraints during labor and delivery. It can pose health risks for mother and child, and can interfere with healthcare during pregnancy, labor and delivery.
